"But I do understand that for McCarthyites anyone on left you want to demonise"

A faintly tragic, slightly amusing attempt by this attention seeking opportunist & circus sideshow to paint herself as the victim. Sad, really, I suppose.

How's the IRA these days, Claire?

Disarmed (2005) under a multipartite international peace treaty. You might have heard of it?
It (the IRA) ceased fire in 1997 upon acceptance into formal talks leading to the GFA (1998).

There is no evidence whatsoever for your first contention. Remain campaigners cite polls showing Remain holding a modest lead. You should acknowledge that this is weak evidence, because Remain led by similar amounts just prior to the 2016 vote, yet lost. As would happen again.

So there is no legislation currently in place that could be used? How long does it take to propose, debate, agree, submit and enact legislation nowadays? Subject to appeals and scrutiny from the Lords, obviously.

If everyone was willing, 3-4 days.
If Govt wish to prevent a bill becoming a law, Lords can filibuster & run down the clock. It's a recognised technique.

I don't think so. We have only one former example and in that, Leave came from behind.
There has been no active Leave campaign for three years. If there was to be another vote, it's reasonable to expect Leave would again come from behind & win.
You need to provide a counter.

Any new law stating illegality of No Deal won't make the statute book. Brexit supporting Lords have the power to filibuster & will do so.
A lost VONC leaves the PM the power to choose the date of a GE; after Brexit.
Default is no deal exit on Oct 31.
Westminster is powerless.

Compare and contrast with the PR referendum - that was a very specific question which got a "no" vote. If there had been a vague "should we change from fptp to something different" it might have got a yes vote. However, we didn't spend another 3 yrs arguing about PR , did we?

It's possible that employment opportunities flow into the void created. If vols are insufficient to retain logistics roles, others may meet those customers same or changed needs. Automated facilities are often labour-light so, if there's local need, might be more jobs than lost.

Or you could try facts

SOME KEY FACTS ABOUT THE 2017 ELECTION

Total number of Labour votes:

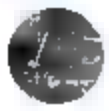
2017 Corbyn:	12,875,000
2015 Miliband:	9,347,000
2010 Brown:	8,607,000

In other words, Corbyn (and the policies adopted by Corbyn) increased Labour's vote by 3.5 million over Ed Miliband and by 4 million compared to Gordon Brown.

To those arguing that this simply reflects the fact that the electorate is bigger - it's not true.

The total electorate was around 47 million at this election, only 1.5 million up on 2015 and 2 million up on 2010. And yet - I repeat - Corbyn increased Labour's vote by 3.5 million!

The idea that Corbyn's success is simply down to May running a poor campaign is also not borne out by the facts.



She may well have run a disastrous campaign, but the fact is that Theresa May increased the number of Tory votes by over 2 million compared to Cameron.

2017 May:	13,667,000
2015 Cameron:	11,335,000
2010 Cameron	10,702,000

Again, this cannot be explained simply by an increase in the size of the electorate.

The truth is that any serious analysis of the 2017 result has to conclude that Labour's increase in votes is due to Jeremy Corbyn and the radical manifesto he fought on.

That's an interesting analysis but there's a common factor you've not mentioned: the polarisation of politics in the 2017 GE had the effect of increasing the votes of the 2 main parties. That damages the idea that total votes is much of a measure of the leader's skills.

In almost a countries, fixed commitments mean they have very little left of national income with which to do anything.
For Eurozone countries, the Commission can limit what countries like Greece or Italy can spend, by capping their borrowings.

Compare and contrast with the PR referendum - that was a very specific question which got a "no" vote. If there had been a vague "should we change from fptp to something different" it might have got a yes vote. However, we didn't spend another 3 yrs arguing about PR , did we?

I will be very unhappy when a completely separate country & Govt is using the currency of the U.K.
Whether high or low, confidence in the Pound is our responsibility.
Both rUK & Scotland lose control of their currency this way.

We're going after the tax avoiders.

Tax avoidance is legal & often encouraged by HMG, for example, personal pensions, incentivised by tax avoidance through marginal rate tax relief on savings.

It's tax evasion you need to clamp down on. White collar financial crime & blue collar VAT and personal & Corp tax fraud.

Pensions are not 'tax avoidance'. People do not pay into pensions because they want to avoid paying tax on income. They do it so that they will be owed money on retirement.

I think the difference is that those urging for Brexit to happen at the top level are doing it for personal gain (power and financial), whereas those keen to stay in the EU are doing it for the greater good, a view formed from wisdom and education.

It wasn't a surprise to me. People dont understand how little of a currency depreciation comes through to inflation. Empirical studies show it's as little as 10%, so a fixed, 10% fall in GBP results in a pulse of inflation +1% a year to 18mo later & washes out in a further year.

Put another way, those convenient sounding shortforms for relationships other countries have evolved to have over decades are in many cases singular and would not work. In fact, reviewing your list, only WTO 'works' cleanly as first step from EU membership.

If you are a citizen of this country you owe it to yourself & generations unborn to read Mrs May's Withdrawal Agreement for yourself as @CandaerReynolds & her group did. Don't wait for your MPs- they're too busy hating @BorisJohnson. It is a terrible deal. assets.publishing.service.gov.uk/government/upl...

The point of a second referendum would be to establish if there's a mandate for any one kind of brexit. Given the 2016 result was Norway, Switzerland, Canada, WTO, mythic lexit and sunlight uplands - I'd love to see what actual plan brexiters would agree on.

You're failing to recall what was on the voting slip. It was Leave or Remain.
It's not required nor logical to have predefined the end-state, having left completely, before the emergent journey has begun.

The ‘trend’ is in my view well within the margin of error. ‘Trend analysis’ here involves guessing that a small difference in the difference (between Remain & Leave) is ‘real’. The data aren’t susceptible to this interpretation. I remind you that Remain led up to the 2016 vote.

Uk law has rested very heavily on respect for private property rights. It is with extreme reluctance that the state ever interferes with the right to enjoy one's own property (provided it's not ill-gotten).

Labour's proposed ban on animal testing is wrong. It places animal welfare over medical advancement and the alleviation of human suffering. The party's unthinking embrace of animal rights is a betrayal of the left's humanist roots, writes Neil Davenport.

John Major is such a hypocrite. He's slamming Boris Johnson for proroguing parliament and yet he himself prorogued parliament in order to suppress discussion about the cash-for-questions scandal. The anti-Brexit elite has no shame.

I'm truly astonished. That no one has posted to disagree with the assertions (which are very critical of Major) strongly suggests to me that those assertions are pretty much spot on.
In which case, Major, what a hypocrite you are.

Not exactly.

They can spend to enable full employment and can balance the economy / inflation using taxation when necessary.

A surplus (or debt reduction) for a Government is always debt for the public.

It won't. No major change in tax policy is likely because we will have another hung parliament.
I can rest easy on my large pile (which I definitely earned) & not worry McDonnell will expropriate it.

There is no debt to GDP level denominated in £s that is problematic for the UK govt. The fact you think the UK govt can't afford to keep public services running to a decent level just shows your lack of critical thinking on such matters.

Theory aside, any Govt which decided it wasn't going to pay attention to debt & perpetually deficit finance the country would find the FX markets unforgiving. Spending power of GBP would fall continually: imported goods eg meds would rise in price. Hardship inevitable.

Let's take the opposite position. Let's instead raise NHS spending where it would have been if we'd have carried on with Blair-like increases. What should we expect to happen to death rates in U.K. over next few years? Perhaps a small fall, say 12,000 pa for ten years. Well done!

Post-tax taxing is routine. VAT on purchase; SDLT on property etc. The only thing we don't tax is wealth itself. I won't earn again as, at 59, I have a permanent impairment. But it isn't life shortening (just damages quality of life).

Japan has been literally writing off its own debt

It had

- zero impact on the bond markets
- the currency did not fall - in fact slightly strengthened

It depends how you distribute new money and the strength of your economy that matters.

Serious error: Japan is a massive, net creditor nation (UK is not). They own trillions of foreign assets.
Of course both Japanese & foreign investors are happy to gobble up BoJ / treasury bonds: they know they're good for the borrowed money.
They haven't engaged in print/spend.

He also possesses pension rights valued on the open market at around £1.4M. They're so valuable because his long-service pension rights benefit from full or almost full indexing. I'm not doing badly, but my pension erodes the longer I live, uprating by lower of CPI or 2.5%.

His net worth is around £2.2M - £2.5M, mostly from property & a huge pension 'pot'. Most of Corbyn's pen. rights accrued in better times & are updated by RPI & benefit from earlier normal retirement age than any scheme today.
Never heard him campaign against MPs fatcat pensions.

Unfortunately no-one lives forever, thankfully the age statistics of Leave voters means it is is highly likely a large number will have floated of this mortal coil and they won't be able vote to leave again.
Also there are younger generations who support remain now able to vote

The 'younger generations' include those not quite old enough in 2016 to have been pensioners. More people have since retired and will have changed their minds to now support Leave.?

But if you weren't lucky? And you were now disabled after all your hard work?

How would you feel about people hoarding wealth then?

I've helped a family member buy out their spouse after a marriage breakdown so that they didn't lose their home. Also to start pensions for three people so as to reduce fear of old age penury. I also give to small, local charities. I've helped more than if the state had it all.

Thanks, but crikey, it's even worse than I thought. At the moment I have considerable savings with NS&I as they briefly opened a 2.2% bond (3yrs). I/we (family) don't yet know what we'll do when the bonds mature. Nice prob to have, I guess!

I worry that buying any bond-like product at the moment would mean buying expensive, as the protection they offer has worth & that prompts people to bid them up way over par. Let me find an example.

I'm not any good at this, and I know it. Looking at ten year U.K. gilts, we've hit an all time low, with yields of a fraction of 1%.
I just looked at an annuity, 2.3% with 50% spouse benefit & escalation of 3% pa. I appreciate I hand over my capital but get assurance in return.

You can have a safe space and not oppress others. Every time Israel does something horrific, people try to justify it with "a safe space for the Jewish community" Stop it. I don't accept it from other governments so I don't accept it from Israel either.

No, they can't have a safe space without some degree of oppression of others.
When claimed, the claimer is invited to review the geography, history & politics of adjacent states.
Stop pretending there's an easy solution. If there was, a democracy would have chosen it by now.

Total bullshit. He wants the Israeli Government to stop oppressing and invading the sovereign land of the Palestinian people.

Apparently it's not antisemitic for wanting a Palestine, but evidently no Israel and of course no Zionism.

Also, allegations of antisemitism didn't just start in 2015, this Corbyn acknowledging them back in 2009.

They can't do a deal because as Theresa May found, the minute you expose any plan for delivering Brexit to the slightest scrutiny, is the minute it all falls down. So 'no deal' is their preference for exactly that reason. It's pitiful but it's obvious.

No link between side of party membership & votes recorded by that party at the next GE.
Sounds surprising?
It shouldn't, if you have a grasp of statistics.
Even a very large party has a membership of around 1% if the size of the electorate. To a first approximation, zero.

I fear that is impossible unless a wide majority in favour of leaving without a deal is determined, which can only be achieved by a second vote. (Compromise re NI border seems impossible). But the fact is - the issues are too complicated for any of us to reach a rational decision

My philosophy is 'if it's not broken don't try to fix it'. The EU is not perfect but I can't think of any way in which I personally would be better off if we left. Apparently, there are several ways in which I would be worse off. So, from a selfish POV - better in than out. ❤️

Labour Leave @labourleave · Sep 7

Someone shared this under the Times piece. Suspect millions of people feel like this. Many, many millions. They will never come back to the parties they hold responsible.

> We lost almost 50 years. Almost 50 years without a say. Without a vote. My entire life spent in the EEC/EU against my will. Nobody ever said times have changed. Nobody ever said they didn't know what they were voting for. Nobody ever said this is a constitutional outrage. And they didn't just leave it as the 1973 result. They pushed further. Decade after decade, treaty after treaty. Against my will, in my name, without my say. Not one solitary vote.
> I get my single vote, after a lifetime. I see the banks, the governments, the foreign leaders, the universities, the unions, the businesses, the corporations, the talking heads, the papers, the newsreaders, the stars, all lined up against me. I have nothing but a single vote. They have power, almost unrestrained, definitely immoral, absolutely ruthless power. They use my taxes to lie. They take my money and that of people like me. They tell me I am stupid, ignorant, racist. They promise hellfire and damnation. I trudge forward through sneers and insults. I am a nobody but I have a vote. I cast my vote, never expecting to win.
> Another three years. The basic agreement on which all democracy rests is ignored. The simple obvious principle that winning votes are enacted. I hear ten thousand lies, the whisper of angry serpents. More hellfire and damnation. Endless plots and schemes. They will give me something that wasn't promised. They will give me a substitute, a fake, a turd they call a diamond. I don't want it. I just want the thing I voted for. I just want the thing I won. They give new meanings to the words that matter. Democracy. Sovereignty. Freedom. All become their opposite.
> A coup, they say. Trying to enact the vote is a coup. This is the final insult. All language is corrupted, all meaning there to be abused, twisted, rendered in false mockery of its agreed and traditional self. Anything to

Thing is 'Tax Take' is what we want to increase:
Steps:
1. Beef up HMRC staff (cut by Tories)
2. Deal with Tax evasion
3. Increase Inheritance tax
4. Ditto property taxes (capital gains)
5. Tax Internet giants
We can increase 'take' without draconian rates that may cut take ...

Parliament has every right under the FTPA to refuse a snap election. Johnson is a man who said he would rather die in a ditch than obey the law. So yes, dictatorial is an apt term. Tin pot, optional.

Increase in Corp tax will yield less tax as new companies domicile in other countries (you can't prevent them doing so).
Top rate tax: the jury is out on whether it'll increase tax take. My bet is it won't, as mid-50s execs will choose retirement & consulting instead.

John, I don't trust Mr Corbyn's aims or means. I feel the same about you. Britain is a country where there's a degree of tolerance for increase or decrease in public spending of no more than about + or - 5%. I say this because over the last 40y, top rate tax has varied 40-50%.

That's daft logic. Here's a test. After the 2017 General Election, the elected MPs took their seats. Some were beaten & replaced as happened in Canterbury.
After the 2016 EU referendum, nothing happened. 3.25 years later, nothing has actually changed (apart from project fear).

I'm constantly surprised at the mental gymnastics some people will do to to justify people they like doing bad things. This is how corruption spreads and is deemed "ok" - it wasn't really misuse & everyone does it... no wonder we end up with sh*t government's.

Also, look up Diane Abbott self portrait. Around £12,000 of public money was used to pay a particular artist to paint Ms Abbott. My bet is she too broke no actual laws, but her opponents point at this as a very questionable spend, directed in a way which seems irregular.

I disagree w Lab's abolish public school stance. IMO all state schools should be educationally as good as Eton. BUT I HATE academic snobbery on here cos a politician didn't get above D at GCSE. What I'd like to see is some deliberately exceptional schools & a few Unis that are state owned & state run and equipped with the 'best' staff & resouces.

You might think, I've heard this before. But I'm thinking of a parallel to the French Grandes Ecoles system. Why not?

I am not sure you need one of those ever. Air heaters (upright 2kW) of similar power will do the job & with faster responsiveness. Maybe €40 for one with a thermostat.

@MichaelYeadon3 over the years I have tried most things. No gas here and I don't want a cylinder in the garden. Pellet burner (large) is great for the entire downstairs. But the bedrooms need a top-up. I have found oil-filled suits me. Just replacing with nicer more modern looks

I wonder what the working definition of shortage is, for example one day delay in fulfilling a six weekly repeat medication? Or, cannot get this drug, erratic supply such that the GP won't prescribe it as a maintenance med?

Most (90%++) of medicines prescribed within the NHS are off-patent generics. Completely different from 'big pharma'.
The largest generics company is US (MYLAN), then French (SANOFI) then Israel (TEVA) & so on.

On Radio 4 right now, Long-Bailey or the previous interviewee from Brighton, stated that to address climate change she'll have to lose her iPhone because it contains, "the clues in the name, rare earths".
Rare earths are more prevalent in the earth's crust than is copper.

I voted Leave but I don't buy this EU force centralisation & full control story.
There is definitely a wish from Brussels & some countries, notably Germany, to form an EU armed forces. But it can make no sense to pull 28 national forces into a small set of commands.

Illegal isn't automatically criminal. Put another way, imprisonment needs to be in the Act which rendered something illegal. Or at least that's my understanding.

You did. I don't quite get it, but according to EU law, which trumps UK law, the decision rests with the executive (PM)
So despite parliament passing UK law to seek extension, EU law says it's up to PM to ask for it, and if he doesn't he's not breaking the law.....

It's an EU law matter, not a domestic one. The EU legislative system has created a few contradictions/dilemmas with UK laws on a few occasions. It's going to get messy, and words will be interpreted differently.

He still doesn't have a viable solution to the backstop, unless he can find one we will end up without a deal.

From Tory benches, the braying & bullying, the shouting & jeering is just disgusting

In a triple-header of revelations today, The Slog assembles the evidence to condemn the Prime Minister as an anti-democratic, unconstitutional and enthusiastic supporter of Superstate hegemony and coordinated European photographed with our armed forces. But throughout 2018, she signed five separate EU military union directives that relinquished British control over them.....and kept Parliament in the dark about her neocon treachery. Secrecy has always been her preference. Her unconstitutional power-grab continues to march on, largely undetected by The People – and unreported by the mainstream British media.

Mrs May's signatures are worthless. While the PM does have a range of executive powers, some of which involve the military, she doesn't have the power to do any of the things you allege she has.

If that's the case, why has Boris made no real effort at trying to get a deal?
He still doesn't have a viable solution to the backstop, unless he can find one we will end up without a deal.

Here's a question it'll be easy to answer: did Heath take us until the EEC (whatever it was called then)
-on his own, relying on the executive powers of a PM or
-after heavy involvement of both Houses of Parliament & the civil service
Strong bet is the latter.

'Capitalism' a broad description that is misused. The Germans succeeded due to productivity and innovation.

Tax avoidance is the use of creative accounting or use of 'passive earnings tax laws' to keep hold of money taken off others.

What are 'passive earnings tax laws'? Debt has its place in running most companies, for a range of good reasons. I agree that, when done for malign reasons, it should be judged as evasion & disallowed. I think we must retain the avoidance/evasion distinction.

Passive or rentier earnings can be rent, share dividends, inheritance, hedge fund windfalls etc
A worker earning £24k pays around £4k tax.
Shareholder (passive) receiving £48k would pay £2.3k.
That's the law.
Water co.s debt is owed to 'parent' co.s. It's not a real loan.

Our tax laws are so complex that even clever CEOs in small cos cannot possibly understand it well enough to operate a company (other than v basic) without 'tax planning advice. After the next GE, it's not going to be possible to simplify it. Thus, best to make the best of it!

Many tax & business items are not arbitrary & have to be agreed with HMRC. Licensing a name or technology held by another in a group of related cos is entirely legit. Starbucks & Google is worthless without the name & nothing compels the topco to install the IP in country.

The licensing invoice conveniently comes from a tax haven like Luxembourg.

In spite of decreasing corporate tax the tax take has gone up. Reasons included the 'Google' tax and a clampdown on banks' creative accounting.

Laws can be made. It's the will that is missing

Yardley Yeadon @MichaelYeadon3 · Sep 11

Here, we appear by happenstance to agree. You want state revenues to be greater; I want the Corp tax as low as possible. Along the way, both have happened. Numerous examples support that one follows the other. Lower taxes, more work done, lower Corp tax, revenues up :)

Pfizer made almost no profit from Viagra because of the huge costs of fighting counterfeiting & other litigation. The money used to buy it more of less passed directly to lawyers & crooks. Didn't help shareholders.

I think it's fair to say that we can't trust the politicians on either side of the house. However, we can trust the many hundreds of our own people who counted the ballot papers after the referendum. I think that's reason enough to leave.

This is ok then is it Jeremy

Jess Phillips once said she would knife Jeremy Corbyn 'in the front'. Ed Davey said Remainers should unite to 'decapitate' Boris Johnson. John McDonnell still won't apologise for repeating a joke about 'lynching' a Tory MP. These people are hypocrites:

Worrying that you're the only person to say "yes, that's about right" to what I know to be fact.

Politicians, especially Labour, repeatedly fail to distinguish legal tax minimisation (avoidance -which is often what Govt intended) from hiding tax liabilities (evasion - illegal).

Anyway, conventional reasons are part of the motive for the break.
If the main motive was to block interference by Parliament en route to Brexit, the closed period would probably have been later. The PM could have prorogued the day before conference season stsrtd, to Nov 1.

You do know that Parliament, by centuries of tradition, closes via proroguing on a frequent basis? Maybe 4 times in 5 years? Each time, for several calendar weeks? And this one admittedly longer, but by just 3-4 days? On reopening, 17 days left to Brexit, Parliament scrutiny?

I just don't accept that a Parliament that has vainly flapped away at Brexit for over one thousand days & nights is being "blocked" by taking a modestly longer break than usual. The Dictator is leaving 17 days for Parliament to restrain him.

Or appointed by the government to support their decisions?

No. They should, however, being of the finest legal minds, be able to distinguish when politicians are intending to involve them in politics, where the matter is non judicable. See the first judgement on prorogation.

in david cameron's final year as PM, HE PUBLISHED as did a number of politicians their tax returns.
CORBYN however filed his tax return late, got some figures WRONG and OMITTED SOME INCOME THAT HE RECEIVED NOT AS MP.
corbyn said he WOULDNT BE PAYING A FINE TO HMRC!

Once tapentadol is generic, it'll be pennies a dose. Same with the CF drugs.
As an industry, pharma is almost done. I doubt there'll be many new drugs in 30 more years, as the carpet of cheap generics will meet almost all needs, cheaply.
Take the long view: for blood pressure!

If it's called 'avoidance' it clearly wasn't intended by lawmakers. No one calls paying into ISAs or pensions 'avoidance'

I've been legally avoiding tax OBO my family for twenty years. We always disclose, never evade & avoid like mad.
I'm fairly sure HMRC asks if you're using any approved tax avoidance schemes. Let me look (though I'm bored of this)

An piece on the Enterprise Investment Scheme. V high risk of loss of capital, so HMRC approved a tax avoidance scheme. They were too generous & needed to narrow the definitions to ensure real risk exists.

If you are using profits/income to invest in something that has social utility or reinvesting in a business, then tax is not owed if done within the guidelines. The examples you mention are not comparable with the 'creative' methods of massive corps/monopolies

It is clearly the duty of judges to consider the limits of their jurisdiction. Let's see what the Supreme Court has to say. However, the law is better served by judges who aren't afraid of politicians.

In the same period, how many people did not die shortly after being assessed by the DWP as being fit to work?
Context matters. In a large population, it would be expected that some people die tomorrow or next week. Sometimes it's not possible to see morbidity, stroke, MI etc.

Jumping topic immediately. You lot can't handle the rest of the story because it diminishes your argument. JC spoke to the IRA to aide the peace treaty, but you just want to leave it at "JC spoke to the IRA", because that suits your tribe's narrative of superiority.

Thst was definitely not his motivation for speaking with the IRA, two weeks after the Brighton bombing.
His life has been campaigning against U.K. in the post colonial era.
You won't find anyone close to the talks leading to the GFA who says Corbyn was involved in any way.

Now was this while he was married to wife no. 1 wife no. 2 or wife no. 37 Remind me what position Abbott holds in his Shadow Cabinet and what possessed him to give her that position.

By James Kirkup and Rosa Prince

Jeremy Corbyn "showed off" a naked Diane Abbott to impress his Left-wing friends when he was a young Labour activist, a new book has revealed.

The Labour leader invited fellow activists to his London flat where they were "shaken" to find Ms Abbott in his bed, one of his friends recalled.

The incident took place in 1979 soon after Mr Corbyn's first marriage broke down because of his near-obsessive dedication to his political activism.

It is described in Comrade Corbyn, a biography of the Labour leader by Rosa Prince, which is being serialised by The Telegraph.

the biggest recepients of welfare cash are private landlords , with rents that are very high paid for by housing benefit and, a fair rent is necessary I think , as there are landlords many in the tory party with many properties who are making a mint even though they aint skint

Private landlords as a group may well be secondary recipients of a lot of ‘welfare’, just as supermarkets are 2ry recipients of welfare. Neither get to keep more than about 5% of the gross (after taxes, rented property now has low yield.

I'll be enjoying life, both in U.K. and in France, independent of Govt. I doubt I'll much notice if we had the Tories, Labour or the Brexit Party in charge. The weather is great on the Cote this time of year, scorching sunshine & 26C peak temps. I love Kent, though, as well.

How much does it cost to get people off the streets & into a hostel, even if you fund it from scratch?
Not much, if you find volunteers to help & the church to donate underused buildings. That's what some good folk in Ramsgate are doing. Some but little help from council.

As the time value of money evaporates, and central banks plead with governments to borrow and spend, the transition we need is beyond capitalism ... my @NewStatesman column:

All of the problems you identify with commerce also exist with models of social spending. If there's no future to borrow from, there's even less from which the state can take in tax. Thus, the social model (aka civilisation) will fail just before the capitalist model.

I find it unbelievable that ending free movement upsets so many, people can still travel to other countries, just cannot settle there unless they have a job to come to and savings to support themselves so they are not a burden on the economy of the country they want to live in .

I'm afraid the 'people with money buy tutors & that's why their kids do better' is unlikely except for a small % who are on the cusp. A tutor isn't a magic wand & most kids are, at best, slightly aided this way. They won't go from bottom 10% to top 10%. Maybe from 55th to 45th?

You can't. But if we have more secondary schools enabling lower pupil/teacher ratio, then teachers will be able to provide better resources/time to individual pupils. Parents probably wouldn't need to hire private tutors.

I didn't have private tutors (or a home during crucial bits of my teens). Neither did my kids, though I & their mum coached them. I refused to buy them private schooling (how would they socialise beyond that cohort?). Still. As a Tory voter, I'm evil, right?

That wasn't what drove Brexit rhetoric though, was it. The whole thing was 'we'll control mass movement from the EU' when in actual fact that wasn't ever the issue. It was fear pushed that Turkey were going to become an EU member and then we'd be swamped by ISIS sympathisers

My specific is that HMG effectively has no control over the no. of EU citizens who enter, stay & work here nor, of course, where they go in U.K.
I know that U.K. could have sought to control non-EU migration but that's not at issue here because the voters could force them to.

It is not possible to be tax domiciled in two counties. Complicated rules determine which is most appropriate. That's why Murdock, Barclay bros et all have chosen tax havens like Monaco for their domiciliation

I meant, tax resident in two countries. Liable to tax on same income twice, with potential tax credits to minimise dual taxation. Not going to be easy, especially if you have multiple sources of income. Tax advisor recommended.

God the people on this thread are fucking stupid.
The SC reaffirmed the sovereignty of the HoC over the executive using a test of reasonableness.

Imagine if the decision was the other way. PM Corbyn could Prorogue parliament at will without due cause. Think about that.

Then, as trusts have legal personality, annual returns are required (implying record keeping, accountants & HMRC?

Of European countries, U.K. is Ireland's biggest export market (only USA is greater, worldwide).
U.K. is also the largest source country for imports to Ireland, bar none worldwide.

We are becoming less and less dependent on the uk though,we have to go around it now rather than through it,anything you sell us can be sourced from other places,it's a bigger pain but it will be done,no choice.

Yes, you can source most things elsewhere, though they'll be more expensive. Equally, there is nothing you sell us that we cannot get elsewhere. We don't know what tariffs we'll pay, but we will avoid the EU's mandated common external tariff & 3rd country imports will be cheaper.

Any or all of those so-called leave positions are in fact different forms en route from no relationship through a FTA to closer ties. It's a continuum. Personally I expected a BRINO. I want an emergent position, that is, determinedly moving away from the current state.

I've listened to the woman in question & I don't recall my antennae pricking up strongly. She's a plain speaker, that's true. It's worth listening to such people from time to time, as often, their views are a milder form of that which is ubiquitous on the streets.

True, but EV has to be ramped up in a controlled manner. Manufacturers have a CO2 cap after that every fossil fuelled vehicle sold will attract a fine. So it's absolutely imperative they sell EV if they want to sell their top end products. Think Audi think Q8

The Germans clever strategy is building hybrids which in testing return lower CO2 o/put. On the street though, the battery component can be unleashed w the ICE thrust for even greater acceleration. A Porsche hybrid offers a 600hp ICE + 100 extra from batts. Press the button!

Only if cars are exported to EU, could their business model be in peril (10% WTO tariff). In any case, even if we Remain, don't forget that the EU recently signed a FTA with Japan, removing tariffs on cars imported from Japan. That alone may prompt all Jpn manfs to exit all EU.

My understanding is wind is suprisingly expensive due to wear & tear to blades? It was seen as a cheap solution but the damage to the blades was not anticipated.. After a few decades, time is taking it's toll. Repair/replacing the blades is quite costly I believe.

Voter ID is a blatant attempt by the Tories to rig the result of the next general election.

3.5 million don't have access to any photo ID. If you restrict that to passport or driving licence it's 11 million.

So long as the ID is broadly defined, so that those who breach the law have to fake something, I don't see it as burdensome at all & should reduce voting fraud to a very much smaller number than it might be today.

There was only one conviction for electoral fraud in the last General Election.

> Key findings from the analysis of cases of alleged electoral fraud in 2017
> The key findings set out in this analysis about cases of alleged electoral fraud in 2017 include:
> - At the time of publishing this analysis in March 2018, there had been one conviction and suspects in eight cases had accepted police cautions.
> - An allegation of personation in polling stations led to one successful prosecution and conviction.
> - Of the eight cautions accepted four were in relation to registration offences; one a false statement on a nomination form; two personation when voting by post; and one return of election expenses.
> - The majority of cases (289), 79% of all cases, either resulted in no further action (207) or were locally resolved (82).
> - Almost half of all cases of alleged electoral fraud reported were campaign offences (165 cases), the majority of which were imprint offences (96 cases).

Madman is a well understood term in negotiations. It works when you have to play in the game they're in (otherwise, I recommend walking away in response to such behaviour). If you are not sure they won't do something harmful to you, it makes you solicitous.

That's appalling / insulting. Poland at least (I know zero about Hungary) has regular elections. You don't like what their electorate picked. Fine, argue that on its (de)merits, in a separate post.

You have nothing to say about NATO. You've all got deep pockets & short arms where it comes to funding your end of the deal. The deal being, the USA does most of the heavy lifting to keep you safe. You appear to be committed to.
Ps: the EU has never been a NATO member.

The biggest poll conducted since the referendum, with a whopping 26,000 British voters surveyed, shows that the majority for Brexit is now even bigger than it was on that historic day in June 2016. The Remainers are a sad and shrinking minority - let's get on with it!

It's not as good for NI as first appears. The failure of the media to explain non tariff barriers to trade is relevant. NI firms trading with mainland UK face a mountain of bureaucracy that will make many firms here uncompetitive.

1. Embarrass the LOHMLO into whipping his MPs to vote for a GE.
2. If Corbyn won't do this, and continues to reek of sweaty chicken, the Tories themselves will propose a VONC & will then vote in a way that says they themselves have no confidence in this government.

The Tories just voted against Labour's motion to safeguard our NHS from being sold off to US corporations in a Johnson-Trump trade deal. And the @LibDems, who voted to privatise the NHS when in coalition, abstained.

Labour built the NHS and we're the only party that can save it.

If you spent £8B per year for a decade, it's quite likely that would deliver no new medicines (pretty much Pfizer's & others record at one point).

I know much more skilled people only on £15 ph.
If essentially unskilled workers at McD get that, what about differentials?
Also, what % of turnover is that profit you cited? Is it pre-tax? What % of their costs is labour? It maybe that a 50% rise will make them loss making.

No, but it really is dark for a very long time bang on the winter solstice that far north. Even in Kent, I think day length is restrictive (maybe 8am to 4pm Max, and it's dawn / dusk-like or worse if overcast, as often it is in winter, for big chunks of the day.

Israel is a terrorist state too. Hundreds of Brits were murdered by terror groups led by future leaders of the country. Supporters - a Third Column - here fed them secrets and helped them. Ian Mikardo MP was one (grandfather of Luciana Berger MP).

Silly post. MPs expenses are to cover the running costs of a constituency office & for some MPs, a second home close to Westminster (so they can readily be called in to vote).
The net effect is that, providing they're not committing fraud, they make no £ from it.
I'm not a fan.

I don't think people say you can't trade with non-EU countries.

What is true is that such trade is subject to the EU's common external tariffs, which are generally reciprocated. This makes trade much harder.

No. The Withdrawal Agreement locks some things but most is down to negotiation. For example FTA. When we get to that, we will have endured years of poor trade conditions. At that point, the EU has nearly £100b pa as upside. Or we can both pass on it :)

My wife & I are fortunate to own homes in U.K. & France. If Corbyn was to become PM, we would choose to reside in France & all our assets other than the U.K. home would move overseas faster than a John MdD could deliver a budget.

Can't believe I'm reading this utter crap!
Are you saying, that someone e.g on minimum wage should pay the SAME RATE of tax as someone earning say £100k per year? Have I got you right on that one Mr Northey?

Personally I don't favour a flat rate, but a system similar to the one we have.
Then, the £300K gross earner pays very much more, perhaps around £126K; a larger amount in a single year than many (most?) people pay across an entire lifetime.

Higher earnings result in greater tax payments whether you support a flat tax (rate) system or one where the rate grows with taxable income. It's illogical that this should happen. It's solely a political matter. Neither system is right or wrong.

That's because Labour handed over an economy which was costing £100,000,000,000 more in expenditure over income (about 10%, close to the developed worlds worst).
Even with essential restrictions to public spending, we experienced many years of budget deficits, hence growing debt.

It is widely expected that a Corbyn Govt would spend substantially more, 'because credit is cheap'. It's a Wonga justification & is dreadful. It does mean that interest payments would be relatively cheap, but paying it back has to be factored in. The £ would fall hard if LAB won.

No. The largest source of 'tax leakage' is small businesses & one man bands, VAT fraud being uppermost. A high % of such businesses are run partly in dishonesty. Large corporates generally can't hide or cheat, but exploit every gap in our huge & complex tax code.

There's a internally consistent case for that.
Note that there are also threshold, or tax free allowances.
The person on MW May earn so little above a generous tax free allowance that they pay little or no tax, perhaps max £500.
The person on £300K pays £30,000, at 10% tax.

My MP is Conservative and hasn't done a bad job, I was a Labour voter but it's been years since I have heard a good Labour policy. I don't want another referendum, I can't see how a 4 day week will work, I'm not hearing anything Labour will do better.

To win this election, we need to get out and talk to people about how Labour will transform our country for the many.

@PeoplesMomentum just launched mycampaignmap.com to help you find campaigning events in the marginal seat that needs you most.

Why? Because US firms would insist the NHS pays for expensive, branded drugs, instead of cheaper, generic alternatives.

The Trump-Johnson alliance would be a disaster for our country.

U.K. is a very small market & would not move the needle for any large Pharmaceutical company.
Also, doctors won't prescribe branded drugs where there is a trusted generic. They should write the branded if it offers real advantages to the patient. I'm on 3 generic & 1 branded drug

The NHS is large, but I'm not even sure it always acts as a monolith.
Your claim that the NHS is the worlds biggest drug purchaser.
It might be true, but in the USA, Express Scripts alone had mostly drug costs of over $100billion.
I think the nhs drug bill is £15-20billion.

The quote refers to the US "Defects Levels Handbook," which allows for up to 30 insect fragments in a 100g jar of peanut butter; as well as 11 rodent hairs in a 25g container of paprika; or 3mg of mammalian excreta.

Need I Say Anymore....

How Labour will pay for their policies

- A new tax on second homes
- A £1,000,000,000 annual levy on oligarchs
- A new tax targeting Tax Havens
- A new levy on technology giants
- Raise Corporation Tax to 26%
- A £5bn Robin Hood tax on The City
- We will close the Mayfair Tax loophole
- Reverse £1,000,000,000 Inheritance Tax Cut
- We will scrap non-dom status
- 50p tax for those on £123,000+
- 45p rate for earners (£80,000 - £123,000)
- Reverse £735m Capital Gains Tax cut
- A fat cat levy on bosses raking in £350,000+
- A 20% tax on private health insurance

The irony of this set of cut & paste ideas is most of the of extra tax revenue will come from the working population. No chance oligarchs will stay & get bled. Non doms are just that - not domiciled. If recognition in tax of ND is withdrawn, they'll have to leave - own goal.

Aren't those 'at the top' already taxed the most and are paying by far the greatest of tax? If he's saying those tweaks to income tax will provide most of the money his plans imply, I don't think it's even close. We're also still spending more than income.

Why would an entrepreneur come to U.K. and invest their capital when, with high marginal tax rates, they're unlikely to make return on capital which the risks require? They won't, but they will invest elsewhere.

I've proudly paid more tax than the 50 people in my street for years.
I'm now unable to work (bladder failure & chronic pain). I'm pretty sure my very long hours & travel contributed to my illness.
I don't want to be exposed to retroactive taxes such as a "wealth tax" aka theft.

Naturally you feel wealth tax is theft that's how people with wealth react to the prospect of a fair taxation system.

My wealth is nothing more than saved net income.
You might mean 'inherited wealth in a trust'?
Arguably some of these glide past due taxes.
Mine doesn't - all taxes already paid, cash waiting to be spent over whatever time I've left. How can it be 'fair' to take more?

Why? Imagine you own something in uk but you want to move it elsewhere. In UK, where private property rights are legally tightly defended, would you want it to be difficult if not impossible? What effect would you expect on foreign investment to U.K.? It'd slow severely or stop.

I expect you'll say "our plans are fully costed", which means you've estimated costs.
What you can't have is a fully budgeted plan, which includes sources & amounts of £.
You can't know it because the viability of extra £ raised by increased tax is untested at the scale implied.

Corbyn & John McD will repeat the error, disdaining foreign exchange markets.

It is reasonable for a poor person to be anxious to keep her money, because she needs it. This is not true of the super rich. They do not need to keep all of their money. They have much more than they need. Some of them have more than they could ever possibly spend.

OK. Here's the truth. The government of a country like the UK which controls its own currency does not require its spending to be funded by tax from the super rich or anyone else.

While that's true, you know that monetary financing of a Govt with a sovereign currency will see its value fall vs. other currencies. That is inevitable if the additional spending is widely, but thinly distributed. Monetary financing on anything beyond small scale is dangerous.

Agreed. I don't think it's feasible. There would also be a big reduction in discretionary spending and this will bring about a jobs recession and, initially, deflation (good only for those with lots of capital). This might last until McDonnell destroys trust in GBP.

No, but QE is not circulating as helicopter money would. It's been used solely to ensure banks are solvent, & new cash is only given in exchange for financial assets of notionally identical value. QE is not expected by most economists to cause inflation except in financial assets

So monetary financing is OK, as long as it's only used to buy financial assets? An obvious solution in that case is for the government to issue a load of bonds and then buy them back using monetary financing.

I dislike the organisation of healthcare in the US.
There is mandatory health insurance widely in the EU as well as free or almost free (at point of use) healthcare.
In U.K. we may be unique in having the NHS.
There is no “best model”; and we share a dislike of the US model.

I'm as sure as I can be that pharma is not a major threat to the NHS.

Nope I'm a realist, the Tories have absolutely decimated this country. Another few years, with no EU to hold them back, I'd dread to think of the state of this country by the time they're finished.

We haven't moved 1" towards a US system. Insurance isn't mandatory & when used, it cannot 'top up' NHS care. A minority pay a low fixed cost towards prescriptions no matter the cost of their treatments. We still spend about 10% of the budget on drugs & >90% are low cost generics.

We spend about 10% of the budget on drugs, this has been stable for years. Almost all prescriptions (>90%) are for generics (ie NOT from big pharma). Pharma negotiates pricing & the NHS has reasonable power to rebuff excessive pricing.

Overall, he did a good job.
I assume you refer to military conflict in Iraq which, as I recall, most were in favour of at the time. I had endless arguments about it, cost me some friends as well. Parliament neglected their duty to scrutinise that time. Corbyn voted against it btw

Well if you recall, Blair lied and said Saddam had WMD when he didn't and we went to war. Had he told the truth I doubt the war would have started, but he needed it to support Bush.

On our nuclear deterrent, he notes its a weapon that's very expensive even when not being used (I paraphrase).
He didn't understand that, as a deterrent, it's not meant to be fired. But as a deterrent, it's been in use 24/7 since it's predecessor & up to the present moment.

Corbyn will find it no easier to recruit GPs. It's unpopular within the medical profession. It's difficult to earn real money, making this an unpleasant combination of long, difficult hours in a long career.

As most of the economy's wealth comes from small businesses, you shouldn't worry about this. There is so much more, but in short - did you notice that they already left? This is taxing them for business they do in the UK, which they are welcome to continue with if they wish.

Sarcasm is rarely effective.
1. Economically important countries which do not possess their own deterrent are aligned militarily to those which do, such as most of the EU member states are in NATO. Under the NATO charter, “an attack on one is an attack on all”.

At the low speeds he's travelling, he is at similar risks to the pedestrians who might shove a handlebar as he passes.
I've ridden over 40years and would not recommend a police bike be used that way.

Please re-read my post. You've missed or misread a small word, which makes it mean the opposite of what you've taken from it.
So, NO increase is ok. The point of trade deals is to increase volume and that happens if prices fall.
Corbyn's post implies increases of >150%.

Typical profit margin pretax is 5.5%. If cost of Labour was also 5.5% (I've no idea what it is) then an increase of 50% on staffing costs will, at a stroke, halve the profit margin & render the business in the 'not worth the hassle' category.

Tories have been in power for the last 15 years where McDonalds themselves even introduced touchscreen orders.

I don't understand you at all, you think a multi-billionaire company will go bankrupt for just paying a living wage to their employees?

Have you ever run a business? Clearly not. My arguments are clear. I'm saying that moving from current NMW to £15 ph would eat a chunky part of the available profit. Either the retail cost rises equivalently, or the business doesn't cover its cost of capital. So, yes.

Tesco profit margin was negative recently despite mostly clean shops & high turnover. Most of our supermarkets are barely profitable. You can't tell this by alone looking at net profit. If you don't know why, it's pointless debating McD.

In 2017, I sold up for just under a billion USD to a large multinational. All my staff had share options and most made enough to clear their mortgages at exit. All but one was a higher or upper rate taxpayer before we sold up.
My numbers on McD were pulled from their results.

The USA is about the only country in the world where the seller (drug company) has 'free pricing' rights. Insurers may or may not fully reimburse a script, if at all. Prices are as high as the market will bear. They can't lower prices, though. If they over-price, they lose sales.

By contrast, U.K. like most countries, sets prices in discussion with suppliers & NIHCE. Govt does not have power to set prices through trade agreements. It just doesn't work like that.

#rtept We in Ireland could abandon our cars, stop heating our houses, shut down the ESB and go back to the Stone age.
It would still make not the slightest bit of difference. China emits more carbon in a few hours than we do in a whole year.

No. I reviewed the accounts of a typical U.K. McD franchise. Pre-tax profit is around 5.5% of turnover. Labour costs are around 25% of t/o. If sales prices are held, there is room for no more than around £2ph increase at which point no one is making a profit.

Patent life can be more or less depending on country. In any case, by the time extensive R&D is complete & the drug is finally on the market, a typical length of commercial exclusivity is 5-8 years (min 5 as regulators give a credit if development has used up all patent life).

I'm no friend of Corbyn but it was him that held the line against Blair's Iraq war that led to ISIS, $1.5 trillion spent, and a million deaths.

I've no doubt you would have been screaming for war. We have to be above these barbarians. Alive in a jaile he'd spew information.

Forgive me, what line exactly did Corbyn 'hold'? At that time, a backbencher with a reputation for being against use of U.K. armed forces on every occasion since becoming an MP. Including against intervention in Kosovo, and also against supporting Kuwait after Saddam's invasion.

True, but if too low, the offering will be undersubscribed. Therefore, the investors buy only when they rate the return as adequate. I'd say that investors effectively set the coupon.

Central banks can create money. Just as high street banks do when they make loans. If this money is spent creating new things, like on infrastructure or on capital expenditure it is non-inflationary.

Zero Hours Contracts are what we used to call casual workers - they used to be for students and such like until the Tories got hold of it. More important is the Tories fudge the massive unemployment. More people means more of both employment and unemployment.

We just don't have "massive unemployment". As compared with any time during my life (I'm 59) fewer people have no income from work. Those who claim the Govt cheats on the stats need to explain, are they cheating more now? Why are wages rising, if we've massive unemployment?

An inside government will try to balance the books, so they say, by spending less into the economy. The economy then shrinks then so does the tax revenues. In UK the current government IMO knows austerity doesn't work but are using it to transfer assets 5/

Calling free stuff just that isn't trolling. Its deliberately provocative. I don't think anyone believes it can be paid for as described. Do you?
Ps: I have no interest in followers. No one is a superior being due to a larger follower count.

I don't think that's beyond challenge. I agree that, initially, Labour would raise the level of state spending inter alia on children's services.
That said, later on, I wouldn't be surprised if the ability of a Lab Govt to help anyone including kids was substantially reduced.

They're going to run a mile aren't they?
They've already pre-warned him.

Before we consider how many migrants can come to the UK we must get plans properly in order.
I.e
Sufficient houses, drs surgeries, hospitals, dentists, schools, jobs.
Without ample facilities tensions in the community will naturally be stretched.

It's the psychology of expectations. We're one the wealthiest capitalist nations so it's harder to keep workers motivated. Which is why standards need to constantly move up to keep productivity high. A 4 day week will boost overall happiness. Happy workers are productive workers.

Please take my argument apart then. Older voters are less likely to be reached this way, aren't they? And what evidence can you cite that their efforts made any difference to their voting choice? Genuinely interested. I'm a scientist & this isn't magic.

Pretty much irrelevant. Critically you lose the ability to borrow independently of the ECB. When you share a currency, others also using it are affected, as if they borrowed. Scottish Ind. folks pls note.

The amount of money taken out by shareholders is typically around 4%. Yes, that's 4% that could theoretically by assigned to something else, but it's surmise & assumption that, if state owned, there'd be more to spend because there are no shareholders. Why do I question this?

A state owned enterprise often runs less efficiently that a private enterprise. The reasons are simple: individuals & teams know that they can win preferment such as bonuses, pay rises, promotion etc that tend to be less available in SOEs. Prob. about 4% efficiency difference :)

It's understandable that Corbyn would be upset, when he is asked a very serious question about his use of the term 'friends' in his introduction, but then he is not allowed to explain why that word was used in that context.

He should have been allowed to just explain himself.

The NHS remains free at the point of use. Only cost routinely levied is a small per prescription charge & even here, more than 90% of scripts are dispensed free even if that charge.
There's separation btn NHS & insured or self-pay in that you can't use NHS & top-up privately.

The key point remains that, with few exceptions, treatment on the NHS are provided free at point of use. No one is denied treatment because they're poor or haven't much money. That's not changing. Even Tory voters like me require that covenant between state & public to be kept.

Boris Johnson hosted the IFT's launch event. According to documents released under Freedom of Information legislation he gave the IFT free use of the Foreign Office at a cost to taxpayers of £6k

David,

I'm happy to take this forward and liaise with Dan Hannan on arrangements. If you agree, I'll hold off getting in touch with him until the FS has cleared [redacted] point below:

The Locarno Suite will be booked in the FS's name, the FCO will have lost income on the hire of the room (about £6,000 – I will check the exact figure; small change I know in the big scheme) – is the FS aware of that and content to sign it off?

The redacted documents that Jeremy Corbyn revealed in the #LeadersDebate are a gamechanger.

They show the government is hiding what was discussed in meetings with US pharma corporations.

People know the Tories can't be trusted with the NHS. This will only strengthen the belief.

Pls. change the record. This meme has been doing the rounds since 1945. The Tories have been in Govt for most of the years of the NHS, now at record funding levels. Meanwhile Lab. has privatised the bulk of that which has been outsourced. The evidence stacks against the charge.

Pharma companies own patents to exclusive meds. They can charge what they like. The NHS, and especially NHS within EU framework can negotiate price down cause it's such a large purchaser. Trump will aim to tie NHS in to trade deal where they must pay set price, not negotiate.

Very few patent protected med used in the NHS come from US big pharma. In most cases there is competition anyway.

Trust Rentoul to get it wrong. Corbyn delivered all zingers, put a coherent vision on Brexit and domestic policy and rightly said the Royal Family required improvement. In contrast Johnson evaded scrutiny on his own trustworthiness and said Royal Family beyond reproach. Andrew?

I hear you. The way you've characterised it, it isn't about colour, but about 'not from here, different from us in important ways'. And lacking consent, which was never sought. Personally I'm more offended by mass migration into poor areas, whole streets of HOMOs, all foreign.

Seriously though might it be to do with accelerated reconsecration? Christian churches are changing to mosques at pace (in part because we don't use them enough.

I believe it wouldn't be hard to restructure such businesses so that the 'TopCo' is domiciled Rx-UK. You'd then find those businesses immune to the 10% equity demand. If it's tried, HMG will be sued by foreign owners. Imagine trying to take 10% of Johnson & Johnson (US Corp).

Why is it so hard for people who earn more to pay a little more tax to contribute fairly for others. I may not like the look of the £ I pay in tax but I don't begrudge it. It is fair to pay more when you earn more. Terrible selfishness.

As someone who until retirement paid around £150K in PAYE income tax, I can tell you that most of us in such a good position don't mind the higher tax rates, and amounts, at higher salaries. This already happens. Your post implies we don't already have a progressive tax system.

Disagree. The real enemies of peace are those, like Iran, and of groups such as Hamas, whose avowed wish is to 'remove Israel from the face of the earth'. And it's not Israel or 'Zionist's' per se that they want dead & gone, but the Jewish people.

How can a law be written to ban zero hours contracts? For years I was a highly paid consultant to biotechnology Cos. I was under ZHCs for mist, giving both parties flexibility. I doubt it's legal to ban ZHCs if both parties want it.
NMW ZHCs will become 1h contracts. Fail.

Youve never got more "sponging" than working. Plus, benefit fraud makes up less than 1% of the benefits bill. Tax avoidance (mainly attributed to the wealthiest) dwarfs this by a huge amount. Tax evasion is what crippled this country. Star bucks alone could pay for benefit fraud.

They feel threatened, stigmatised, and branded unBritish.

They're confronted with anti-Semitic dual loyalty tropes and conspiracy theories.

This is true for the BNP far-right and Labour far-left.

Truly a bad situation. When do we see their interim report? It'll be conveniently after the #GE2019 VOTE.
Oh, and didn't Shami Chakrabarti clear they air with her "nothing to see here" report? And didn't Jeremy make her a Baroness & life peer for doing it? His sole nomination. Odd.

3 things from me:
1- I watched it live in France on BBC World. Thank you, BBC for considering voters not at home on broadcast day.
2- no major winners/losers. A good outcome for all but Swinson.
3- I'm an ill bloke & I recognise one in JC. Mate, step down, don't die in harness.

If it's "prudent with the nations finances", then its appropriate.
The Tories inherited the largest annual overspend in Europe, about 10%. Every year it's over 100%, debt rises. It's taken 9y to trim annual to around 100-103% of income. Debt no longer growing.

Labour has a smaller gap at this point in the campaign period than in the 2017 election. So it's looking just fine. At the end of the day- both parties are going to offer their future for Britain and I hope as many people as possible realize the potential of Labour for us all.

The Russian is a diplomat. However, he's a very unlikely spy, taking part in numerous formal events as a speaker. He left U.K. when his 5 year visa expired & the FO wouldn't extend it. His London posting overlapped BJ's mayoral role. Snapped! Big shock. Not.

Is it Marxism to bail out all the banks (£500bn) after the global sub prime mortgage collapse in 2008? Or letting the banks print QE of £500bn. Or money for proxy wars? They paid into the system. It's right they get that money back, stolen from the nasty thieveing Tories.

The banks were not bailed out. They were given cash in exchange for securities like bonds. If they didn't have enough, they gave equity. That's identical to being nationalised.

Tories get in, harsh decisions to bring budget towards balance; set up incentives for people to create jobs & invest at risk to try for wealth creation. End of Tory Govts, less UE.

We have not had ‘austerity’, typically defined as spending less than national income. We reduced the overspend from 110% in 2010 to within EU limits now. For every year we overspend, debt rises. It’s almost stopped rising. Debt service costs around the same as the Edu budget.

AT @ToucheAdrian · 11h yup, I think many of us are. My issue is with @jeremycorbyn & his policies. IHT £125k threshold is nicking already taxed wealth, CGT at 40% as an entrepreneur is nuts, state theft of 10% of private co. equity is also wrong, I could go on.

"top 5%" line is disingenuous at best

Agreed. I regard some of these as verging on illegal & withdrawal of human rights. Certainly private property rights are at Mr Corbyn's discretion. 10% today, why not 25% tomorrow?

Very much so. Someone who holds an dislike for a section of society is, in my view, more dangerous than someone who causally dismisses many sections. The latter responds to a quiet word, to avoid electoral issues. The former doesn't: they'll sacrifice them for their cause.

Collective punishment?

Vote for candidate first - party second - leader last.

If candidate is decent - not a racist (left or right) - with values inline with yours, don't tar them with same brush as extremists in their party. You'll never honestly vote for anyone if you do.

Then you merely end up swapping one bad party for another - since neither of the two main parties are free from bad leaders and racist members. Doubt any party could honestly say it had no bad apples among its candidates or supporters. It's the candidates that make the party.

It's not 'intervention' in the market. It's stealing: expropriation of private property, legalised by fiat, without compensation. Its 10% equity transfer demanded.
This is the end of private property rights. Investors won't bring capital into U.K. - they know Govt will steal it.

5% of U.K. taxpayers are about 1.5M people.
£83B in extra tax, every year (WASPI extra).
Divide 1 by the other gives £55,000 per top taxpayer in extra tax per year.

The documents leaked by Labour this morning show the key position of the US in a forthcoming trade deal:
- Total market access to the NHS and other service sectors
- Increase to US drug patent lengths, which will drive up the price of these drugs to the NHS
- That there should be "No mention of climate change in any deal"!!
- Preference for a no-deal Brexit
- Driving down of standards for food production including abandonment of EU laws on the use of pesticides, veterinary drugs and pathogen reduction treatments
- Lowering of food regulations including reducing the use of food warning labels and labels that indicate high sugar content.

This scares the shit out of me, and it should scare the shit out of you.

We all deserve much better than this Trumpian race to the bottom.

Lead Negotiator Analysis/Comments

- Very good atmosphere with strong discussion on substantive IP issues. The US made a strong pitch on geographical indicators, proposing six objectives for the UK in this area. Provided a useful insight into the offensive areas the US is likely to pursue in an FTA. Trade secrets discussion was insightful, indicating this will be a key priority for the US. Unclear how far apart we are on this at present. A more limited discussion on pharmaceuticals. The US stand up front that they were unable to have an in depth conversation given there are difficulties in NAFTA in this area. The US also said that the current Administration may want a shift in some areas of policy here so they were unable to answer some of the questions we posed. It was nevertheless a very helpful exposition on the key areas we can expect the US to push in an FTA and for us to start to determine the areas where we may find ourselves in difficult territory. The impact of some patent issues raised on NHS access to generic drugs (i.e. cheaper drugs) will be a key consideration going forward. Biologics were hugely contentious under TPP so one we were interested in discussing but unclear how far apart we are in this area. Agreed that for the next Working Group we would discuss: getting a better understanding of each other's IP systems, our respective governance processes and procedures in trade negotiations, stakeholder engagement in IP. We also agreed to come back to some of the specific issues such as GIs and pharma patents. Good progress on the SME work stream within the STO work plan with agreement to complete product first quarter of next year and to join up with the wider SME [regulation] group

The Americans are probably pressing to have proprietary generics wherever possible rather than white label generics. Yes, the former are slightly more expensive but are all at least 80-90% cheaper than when still patent protected.

I worked in this field for 30 years. I know that patent life is actually often too short because what matters is 'commercial exclusivity'. The US FDA gives a drug maker a patent term extension of 5y to incentivise them not to give up if the R&D journey is lengthier than usual.

I like the idea that we might negotiate cheaper drug prices as part of a #trade deal.

That is usually the objective for both parties. I've never heard of a party seeking to raise prices. That's because you can buy them cheaper without a deal.

That is a very poor characterisation of what he is saying. I am zero fan of Corbyn, but I think misrepresenting his statement is wrong and ultimately weakens your case.

He used analogies where Jews are not to Israel as Muslims are not to ISIS.
Solving for religion gives Israel is analogous to ISIS.
Horrifying that he thinks this way. I feel genuinely sick.

It's not even current. It's a 2017 document. And it's about lowering drug prices while increasing volumes. That's how free trade benefits both sides. Small profit margins but better volumes is the classical way to grow a business.

I don't think Euro. legal systems automatically recogn. this PTE. An agreement to recogn. PTE could enable drugs coming to market that would otherwise be abandoned as commercial prospects in US alone weaken. It wouldn't extend patent of most drugs: they don't get a PTE. Helpful?

It's not about lowering drug prices you fucking liar! You don't open up your social healthcare to notorious price gouging US pharmaceuticals and medical insurance companies. There's a reason why Bernie Sanders has united people in America against its current medical system!

You're nice & polite. I assure you, there are tariff (yes) or non-tariff (yes) barriers between US companies & UK buyers (in this case pharma & generics houses and our NHS). These keep prices high but volumes low. A FTA removes barriers, lowers prices & increases volumes. Hugs.

The document is almost three years old, preceding Mr Johnson becoming PM.
Nowhere in the document does it say or imply that "the NHS is for sale".
The parts I read related to agreeing cross-access of drugs into the other's system. No such deal concludes except with LOWER prices.

Now it's the prospect of taxing capital gains on business as if income (so, 50%, vs 20% now). I simply couldn't justify the life/threatening effort needed to convert an idea in a very valuable business, sold in 2017.

Using part of the 2017 proceeds, on which I paid millions in CGT, we bought in France, from where I'm tweeting. I see this as a 2nd & holiday home. But it would be straightforward to redomicile in France, if absurdly, tax on entrepreneurs was lower here. I'd just not come back.

Almost 100% of drugs used in the NHS are supplied by private companies.

Ms Andrews has reviewed the docs more than I have. I'm already sure that Mr Corbyn's claims are untrue - none are supported by the doc.
Listen to Ms Andrews' dissection of it, then decide for yourself - is the Labour leader lying or not.

I'm a leave voter in the North, and I will be voting Labour. I've spoken to many people around my age (I'm 24) and they will also be doing the same. Brexit is a big issue, but the NHS is a bigger issue. We can't trust the Tories with it.

If the Tories wished harm to the NHS, they'd have killed it off by now.

They wish to hold onto their patents longer to charge more so the NHS can't buy the same from a cheaper supplier. Of course we want the best for the patients. But not at the cost of big pharma price rigging the costs.

I was with right until your last line or so - verging on racism? We are in severe danger if, when discussing the findings of a poll, you call the very finding 'verging on racism'. These are not my beliefs, or assertions about others. They're the published findings of a poll!

Given how shambolic Johnson has been in debates and interviews, it's clear that he'd be mauled by a similar grilling. And if Labour were told beforehand that Johnson would appear, they are 100% right to expect him to.

EU migrants of working age living in the UK who do not have a job account for a city the size of Bristol, new figures have revealed.

One in seven of the 2,733,000 EU migrants aged 16-64 - a total of 390,000 - are unemployed or "inactive".

Jeremy Corbyn wants ISIS terrorists to return to the UK, he attacked the government for stripping ISIS Jihadis of their passports & went on to blame Islamophobia & racism for Brits leaving to fight for ISIS.

Elect this man at your peril!

No money was lost, or only a small amount. That's because we didn't give bankers a penny. We bought their companies. That's why we own them. Don't you recognise it? It's the same method as proposed by Uncle John McD to renationalise the trains. You still need to pay the drivers.

That part is fine, it's the tiny extra revenue which is not. Labour's manifesto requires around £80B extra. It's not coming from NI or VAT, but from high earners income tax & corps. At present, IT raises 10x as much as Corp tax. Let's assume £70B extra, solely from those on £80K+

Lenders will be much more uncertain that a Corbyn Govt would honour the debts. Thus interest on borrowed money could easily be double or more what it is today. Corbyn could easily find his annual debt servicing cost reaching £100billion. That's the better part of the NHS budget.

Another myth. The tax relief, which is rightly limited these days, defers tax. You get a quarter of your pension tax-free, but the rest is taxed in the usual way as income. Half my life I got basic rate tax relief. I did very well so most of my large pension is taxed at 40%.

It's the utter lack of notice. Lack of consideration. Lack of empathy.

Those nearing retirement shouldn't have the rules changed - and not be told.

Utter disrespect.

Jail is punishment, protection (for the public) and should provide for reform of attitudes & behaviour.
In most cases, excluding multiple violent offences, terrorism & premeditated murder, I would want there to be incentive to reform, if that could lead to early release.

Labour will cut regulated rail fares in England by 33% from Jan 2020 & make rail travel free for those 16 and under. Funding will come from existing budgets drawn from Vehicle Excise Duty.

That's real change. A better world is possible if you vote Labour.

McDonnell is as usual quite measured in his public utterances.
On rare occasions where he's been secretly filmed or recorded, he's said things that justify his "Who's who?" hobby of 'fomenting the downfall of capitalism'.
I find him frightening., even in cosy mode this campaign.

I think organised tactical voting is corrupt. It's as good as going to a constituency in which you've no right to vote, and voting, while conspiring to let someone from out of your area come in and vote in your constituency instead.

It's not the corporations you need to worry about.
Corp tax raises just THREE % of all tax revenue. A small tweak is rounding error contribution.
It's the mobile top slice. Income tax is 30% of total. Ten times more important.

when corporation tax was higher at 29% in 2010 they didn't all run away then so why do you think they will if labour put it up to 26%

It's not the corporations you need to worry about.
Corp tax raises just THREE % of all tax revenue. A small tweak is rounding error contribution.
It's the mobile top slice. Income tax is 30% of total. Ten times more important.
This is why Corbyn has ZERO chance of success.

He'll be coming for those just above median earnings. That's because there are lots of you. And mostly because you've no where to go.
In any case, the principle having been argued for, I expect you'll be falling over each other to contribute more tax.

Wrong. It other way around; every Tory govt leaves the country in a mess & it's Labour who then have to repair the damage. Historically Labour govts have been better with economy than the Tories & been more likely to balance the books more often than Tories. Tories tripled debt.

Labour will fall apart after Corbyn goes. They offer nothing that hasn't failed everyone already.
Different story if Corbyn becomes PM. But that's unlikely.
Tories are the longest lived political party in Europe, if not the world. They'll survive.

They won't be writing anything off. If they do, they'll have to write off every penny loaned to U.K. students since the scheme started. This would make PPI look like a dress rehearsal.

Turnover is just money moving around the economy.I pay £50 to a cobbler for shoes. Tanner pays £47 for leather. Merchant pays £45 to tanner. Tanner pays £40 to the farmer. Farmer pays £35 to feed cows etc. And Corbyn wants a slice each time? Insanity.

Sure, if I had little option but to have done a job like that - in fact I did 1978-81 - I'd want a pay rise.

More seriously, you can go insolvent. Zimbabwe eventually had to dollarise. Why?

Corp tax delivers very little of the total revenue, so you're planning most of the increase on a cohort which includes the most mobile.

I own a small business. I used to work in the civil service. I make more money now, but pay less tax. It really isn't fair at the moment. I'd happily pay more if I knew it was going to improve services and infrastructure, not directly into the pockets of utility bosses for e.g.

Hard to believe unless you earned very little before & just a tad more now.
Any greater profit and you can't get post tax cash out these days without punitive divi taxes.

I don't believe the implication. The implication is that more often than not, its gangs of white men who groom, rape & sell underage girls (of any ethnicity). I don't believe it. Whats probably real is, if you include all grades of CSE, you can drown out the multi-Asian signal.

One factor is an ageing population. Older people require greater medical resources of all kinds as they live longer with chronic illnesses. Another is dearth of social care, often leading to “bed-blocking”. So yes, immigration, but not only immigration.

Jews were settled for millennia on the land partly enclosed by modern Israel.
Land classified by the UN as illegally held was originally taken largely after wars where every Arab nation was ranged against a fledgling state. Enemies could shell their cities eg from Golan Heights.

Yep. A poor policy to use private funding to build hospitals. One which was a mistake and certainly one that should not be repeated.

It wasn't a 'mistake'. The whole New Labour project was a monstrous deception. At its heart was sizeable increases in spending without increases in tax or, indeed, borrowing. Sort of.
What Brown was doing was what's called off balance sheet transactions. Now known as PFI.

Enron mngmt team would have been proud. Thing is, New Labour was certain eventually to fail financially. Blair, Mandelson & Brown reckoned they'd be retired from Govt by the time its voters rumbled them. So it proved.
Corbyn isnt clever: he'll financially out himself in months.

The argument that JRM has more in common with the white working class than Jeremy Corbyn does is a damning indictment of said working class, not Labour or Corbyn. Decades of Murdoch media has done a number on these people.

The guy set up Nye Bevan News to highlight what the Tories have been doing to the NHS, but then completely lost his mind the following years. Not exactly a great scoop is it? Anyone that believe JRM understands the working class is off their head, just remember Grenfell.

Makes me sick, labour claiming 100% of the credit for 'our NHS'. First, it doesn't belong to you, Labour, just because you had a visionary leader decades ago, before most of us were alive. Second, we all pay for it. Last, there was a postwar consensus (Lib, Tory, Lab) to do it.

How else do you think commodities reach you if not via traders? Serious question. Scarce resources are cleared via the market / price mechanism.
There are alternatives such as queuing, rationing, drawing lots etc. The one which has taken hold almost everywhere is price.

I'll ignore the 1,000 or so comments that have chosen to focus on my friend's exaggeration, and ignore the main point, which is that people only realised how much of a sociopath Boris Johnson is when they saw his reaction to a hospitalised child.

Luckily, it doesn't take a religious leader to front a non religious government. Thatcher wasn't famed for empathy. Blair put all of his on. Have we had an empathetic PM?

The mother explained this in the original article - he was unable to get comfortable unless lying flat. They tried holding him and sitting him in a chair but he would become restless and move to the floor so he could lie down. No bed in the room.

Parents often do that. Also, doctors apptsoften cannot be had. In our local GP, if you show between 8.30-10am, you will be seen. But appointments are few & far between, only go forward two weeks and so it's best if worried to go to A&E. Visits are commonly not for serious cause.

This is what anti-semitism looks like. Writing a novel where the Jewish character a "middle-aged man, with a proud nose and curly hair" is a "moaning man" whose business "relied on immigrant labour", has "eyes like an unblinking snake" cruises red light areas "In search, as he put it, of a 'bit of black'" and sends his son "pathetic presents, every five years, of low-denomination bills". Count the tropes Rabbi Mirvis. And then maybe tell people they should not vote for the man who wrote it: ladies and gentlemen, I give you the author of 72 Virgins, your soon to be ex Prime Minister, Boris Johnson

Johnson doesn't count among his friends leading figures in Hamas & Hezbollah, terrorist organisations whose reason for existing is killing every Jew & "removing Israel from the face of the earth". Also, the Jewish community are not fearful of Boris. They're frightened of Corbyn.

Are you saying that the billionaires are just greedy money grabbers who are happy to see 14m people living in poverty? I don't want to believe that. I would like to believe that they are caring human beings who will be happy to help make the UK a better society.

How you draw that conclusion I don't know. Let's confirm though that, in their absence, you'd step up and happily pay more tax? After all, we'd hate to think you're a greedy c who'd rather count their money than help out the poorer in our society?

Most of the people that I know are not in the top 5% of earners but would be willing to pay more tax to improve our services and our society.

Me too. It's a question of how much more.
What additional percentage of your net would you give up 'to improve society'?
In Denmark it's common to pay over half your gross even at earnings nowhere

Jeremy Corbyn | Vote today @jeremycorbyn · 5h

Here's what you can do right now to help save our NHS:

1) Pick up your phone
2) Call/text five people you know.
3) Make sure they're going out to vote today and that they're voting Labour.

Pass it on.

According to your & the Tories manifestos, the difference in NHS spending over the next five years is ONE HALF OF ONE PER CENT. You're lying if you think the difference is 'NHS lost' vs 'NHS saved'.
And voters voting for you on this basis are under informed.

As of this minute, 2/3rd of uk electricity generation is nuclear + fossil fuel. As most household heating is gas in U.K., probably 3/4 of total non-transport energy use is non renewables. Add in transport & we're around 80%+ fossil & nuclear.
We've a bloody long way to go yet.

Political parties aren't allowed to put signs on lamp posts, especially not near polling stations. Today, all around Corby, professional anti- Labour boards have been put up at polling stations & schools. Not only is it illegal its really desperate. They sink lower and lower.

Labour's traditional base is as much Hackney as it is Hull; it's as much Broadwater Farm as Barnsley. I might be uniquely obnoxious, and Lord knows there's plenty of evidence to suggest that's the case, but your erasure of BAME and migrant demographics is inexcusable.

Brexit wasn't a factor in the biggest shock so far, where they voted 52% leave yet obliterated Labour in a Red Wall seat.
In that seat, Corbyn LOST it, not Brexit.

Johnson was, before politics, a writer. He plays with words. This selective quotation is part of a rough-sawn characterisation, starting “Some say...” & finishing with “and if you were in a tough spot, there are no finer people on earth on whom you can depend”. It’s a compliment.
